Term: "Clear, Sufficient Background Information"

Definition:

Background information is clear and as concise as possible. It quickly informs the reader about the works cited and information he will need to know to understand the paper, but does not go into unnecessary detail. There are no redundancies, inaccuracies, inconsistencies, superfluous additions, or minor omissions. Someone fluent in English but without any prior knowledge about the content or text would have enough information to understand the argument being presented.